

Is there a 'right' way to remember?

WRITTEN IN STONE

POMEGRANATE
YOUTH
THEATRE
& GEKKOTA ARTS
a triumph of adaption and diversity

You are walking past a war memorial a few days after the commemoration in November. A solitary upright wreath of poppies draws your attention. Then you see that there are two bottles of beer inside the wreath. You are disgusted at such an act of disrespect and determined to remove the offending bottles. However when you look more closely you see a card has been placed under the bottles. It reads....

"This one's for you mate. I miss you and our Saturday nights. We had some good times. God Bless and Rest in Peace."

Far from being an act of disrespect this is a tribute to a friend who has died in a recent conflict. It is an 'act' of remembering.

Does it matter, as long as it comes from the heart?

Chesterfield Museum and Art Gallery

Free event: Saturday 14 November 2015 11am -2pm

See the film and hear the new commemorative anthem
St Mary's Gate, Chesterfield, Derbyshire S41 7TD

